Elgar Encyclopedia of International Economic Law

This comprehensive resource is the definitive online reference work on international economic law.

Edited by Thomas Cottier, World Trade Institute, Switzerland and University of Ottawa, Canada and Krista Nadakavukaren Schefer, Swiss Institute of Comparative Law and World Trade Institute, Switzerland

About the Elgar Encyclopedia of International Economic Law

Organized thematically rather than alphabetically, the subject is split into four principal sections: the foundations and architecture of international economic law, its principles, its main regulatory areas, and the future challenges that it faces. Comprising over 250 entries written by leading scholars and practitioners, traditional international economic law subject matter is supplemented by coverage of newly developing areas. Thus, the concepts and rules of trade, investment, finance and international tax law are found alongside entries discussing the relationship of international economic law with environmental protection, social standards, development, and human rights.

'An amazing compendium covering the full range of international economic law – from its fundamental foundations, history and significant institutions to the basic principles and rules, with a separate section on controversial contemporary issues. Over 250 entries written by the leading authorities in their field succinctly explain the key concepts in clear, understandable language and provide comprehensive references for those seeking additional detail. This work will surely become the standard reference book in the field.'
